You're right Sawtul it looks a bit like the famous Iraq surge.

Actually, it's been going on for more than five months:

27/ 03/ 2007

MOSCOW, March 27 (RIA Novosti) - Russian military intelligence services are reporting a flurry of activity by U.S. Armed Forces near Iran's borders, a high-ranking security source said Tuesday.

"The latest military intelligence data point to heightened U.S. military preparations for both an air and ground operation against Iran," the official said, adding that the Pentagon has probably not yet made a final decision as to when an attack will be launched.

He said the Pentagon is looking for a way to deliver a strike against Iran "that would enable the Americans to bring the country to its knees at minimal cost."

He also said the U.S. Naval presence in the Persian Gulf has for the first time in the past four years reached the level that existed shortly before the invasion of Iraq in March 2003."

However, don't misunderstand me, I am neither sure of nor hoping for an attack on Iran. I just find your 'reasoning' extremely unconvincing, and your assumption that every body but you has been 'fooled'; childish.

It is beginning to look like it's too late for the Bush admin to launch any attack on Iran other than the already crippling financial sanctions imposed by the Europeans and the U.S. But it's never too late to use a proxy: Israel may make another run just as they did recently into Syria, and with the full knowledge and consent of the next US President who will probably be Hillary, as she is well versed in the ways of the Council on Foreign Relations. Also, it is getting increasingly difficult for the US to fund any war unless they ditch their own Dollar and start paying their troops in Sterling or Euros.
